

An Excerpt from "Stories from the Alley, from the Man Behind the Lanes"

It's 2:00 on a quiet Friday afternoon in Winona. No more than three cars grace the parking lot at Winona Bowl, one of them being my own. The lone sound as I walk into the bowling alley is the soft hum of a drill. In a matter of hours, people walking through those same doors will be hit with sensory overload. Black lights, the unmistakable sound of bowling balls making contact with pins, the smell of greasy food wafting from the kitchen, laughter and loud conversation. These are the sights, sounds, and smells that Brian Fakler has become accustomed to after 21 years at Winona Bowl.

I wait patiently at the front desk for the drilling to stop. When it does, Fakler walks out of the pro shop, joking with a customer. He greets me, and then finishes his sale. "See you tonight!" he calls after the customer. The customer reciprocates with the wave of a hand.
